

Malaise dans la civilisation (titre original : Das Unbehagen in der Kultur), parfois traduit par Le malaise dans la culture, est un livre écrit par Sigmund Freud durant l'été 1929. Freud y affirme notamment que selon lui : la culture est édictée sur du renoncement pulsionnel, car la vie en commun suppose une restriction de la liberté individuelle ; le respect des exigences sociales est assuré par le père puis par le Â« surmoi Â» (père intériorisé, faculté à s'autocontraindre, conscience morale) ; la tension entre le Â« ça Â» (principe de plaisir) et le Â« moi Â» (principe de réalité), entre l'égoïsme (amour de soi) et l'altruisme (amour d'autrui), est source du sentiment de culpabilité et de la conscience morale ; ces exigences sociales se manifestent dans la morale et dans la religion : ces discours tentent de légitimer et d'assurer le renoncement au plaisir égoïste.
