The theory does not necessarily pretend to explain the origin of the local disease which in such a case is brought to our notice; but starting from that as fact, it argues what must result from it. Given (it says) one primary tumour, all other facts of the case follow from it by logic or humoral sympathy; just as, in the story of syphilis, secondary and tertiary consequences need only the one hard chancre to account for them. The cancerous cachexia, like the syphilitic cachexia, is but an affair of progressive infection; essentially by the juices of the body--the lymph and blood, but sometimes also accidentally in other ways; an affair only of infection, of ever-widening infection from the one first established focus of disease. How that first focus came to be, and how it came to have its wonderful endowment of infectiveness, are questions which must be separately argued; but meanwhile (says the theory) let us frankly recognise that, where our cancer patients show certain general signs of disturbed health, presumably this cachexia is the effect, not the cause, of the cancer. Of late years, too, there has been change in the point of view in which pathologists have regarded the Anatomy of Cancer. Thirty years ago cancer was supposed to be a specific new bodily texture, having (as cartilage or muscle has) an organisation proper to itself in contrast with other textures, and proper to it in all its forms. In a certain sense, however, though a sense widely different from that of the doctrine of thirty years ago, we may still say that the various sorts of cancer have morphological characters in common; but the likenesses to which I here refer are likenesses rather of expression than of feature. Thus, f...
