

The common perception of a bully is a person that takes advantage of the smaller, weaker person for self-gratification. This is not true in all cases. Some bullies are victims before they become victimizers. I was a bully; it was not because of a choice in the beginning. It was because of my upbringing, environment economics and when you get to be good at something, after a while, you start to like it. Life growing up in the early sixties and late seventies in Kansas City, Missouri was hard for a young Black kid. My mom was a young divorced mother of six, including 5 boys. Being the youngest, I was always working hard to prove to mom and my older siblings that I was just as mature as everyone else. Being the baby of the family made it a difficult struggle, always trying to prove myself. Mom worked all day but still kept a tight ship at home. Raising 5 boys as a single mother brought a unique challenge for her. Mom tried to keep that hard core persona to show us how to be men. She still maintained her sweet, sexy and pristine side. But she would keep it real when the time came to throw down. She taught us all to whip butt and win at all costs and she set the example at times. This help in trying to survive coming home from school, each day in contrast to being bused to a white school. Having to survive the walk home each day without fighting or having guns and knives pulled on you. Each year as I got older it got more and more dangerous even in class.
